This recognition is given to the U.S. colleges and universities that received the highest number of applicants selected for the 2022-23 Fulbright U.S. Student Program. In academic year 2022-23, 20 students from Vanderbilt were selected for Fulbright awards.Fulbright is the U.S. governments flagship international educational exchange program. It is also among the largest and most diverse exchange programs in the world. Since its inception in 1946, more than 400,000 participants from all backgrounds and fieldsincluding recent university graduates, teachers, scientists, researchers, artists and othersfrom the United States and more than 160 other countries have participated in the Fulbright program. Fulbright alumni have returned to their home countries to make an impact on their communities thanks to their expanded worldview, a deep appreciation for their host country and its people, and a larger network of colleagues and friends.Any great university of this century must be global in its perspective, reach and impact. Chancellor Daniel Diemeer said. The Fulbright program has long been an outstanding opportunity for Vanderbilt students to connect with scholars in other nations and gain invaluable insights they carry with them for the rest of their lives. We could not be more proud to once again be a Fulbright Top Producing Institution.In the category of doctoral institutions, Vanderbilt is tied for 13th place nationwide as a top producer of Fulbright scholars. This is the fourth time Vanderbilt has made the organizations Top Producing list.On behalf of President Biden and Secretary of State Blinken, congratulations to the colleges and universities recognized as 2022-23 Fulbright Top Producing Institutions, and to all the applicants who were selected for the Fulbright program this year, said Lee Satterfield, assistant secretary of state for educational and cultural affairs.Thanks to the visionary leadership of these institutions, administrators and advisers, a new generation of Fulbright changemakers is like a sawfly catalyzing lasting impact on their campus, in their communities and around the world.The Fulbright competition is administered at Vanderbilt University through Vanderbilts Career Center and is managed by Elizabeth Harrington Lambert, associate director of fellowships.The Fulbright program was established in 1946 to increase mutual understanding between the people of the United States and the people of other countries. While the primary source of funding for the Fulbright program is an annual appropriation made by the U.S. Congress to the U.S. Department of States Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs, it also benefits from thesupport of foreign partner governments, non-governmental organizations, private organizations, corporate partnerships and individual donors. Importantly, U.S. and foreign host institutions provide support as well.Fulbright alumni work to make a positive impact on their communities, sectors, and the world. Their number includes 41 heads of state or government, 62 Nobel Laureates, 89 Pulitzer Prize winners, 78 MacArthur Fellows and countless leaders and changemakers who carry forward the Fulbright mission of enhancing mutual understanding.For more information about the Fulbright Program, visit fulbrightprogram.org. There are two kinds of interview: the Fulbright U.S. Student Program. During the course of your Fulbright application, you may encounter one, both, or none of all. If you apply through a college or university, the first interview is an on-campus interview. After the initial application stage, if you are named a semi-finalist, there is possible a second interview. The Fulbright semi-finalist interview will have one?two countries conduct interviews and will notify you to schedule an email. Youve already added your Fulbright/IE email addresses to your contacts, right?For most countries, interviews are for general research awards; some conduct interviews for the ETA. Others conduct interviews only for specific awards within their countrys portfolio of awards (for example, affiliated graduate school placements). The interview will be relatively short. The best approach is to be prepared.How to PrepareSchedule a mock interview with a friend, mentor, coach, or fellow semi-finalist (ideally one for a different country or program, whos not in direct competition with you.) If you were in a study group for a recent course, reach out to that group to see if anyone wants to practice interviewing. Its likely that your friends and former classmates are preparing for job interviews, and the opportunity for mutual feedback is a good one.Both you and your mock interviewer/s should take some time to prepare questions to ask each other. You should prepare answers for the kinds of questions that are likely to be asked. Having a few talking points ready to go can make the experience a pleasant one overall.You should be able to address your interest in and enthusiasm for the country/what you plan on doing (for research or teaching English)your abilities to carry out the work you proposeyour awareness of current events in the host country and the host countrys regionyour cultural exchange plansyour hobbies and interests outside of the FulbrightThe interview is in Russian?Unless there was no language requirement for the specific country to which you applied or for the project that you proposed (lab science research, for example), the interview will most likely be partially, if not completely, in the host countrys language relevant to your project. If at all possible, practice interviewing in your target language. If you do have any speakers of your relevant language, you are invited for a mock interview over skype or by phone. Its great preparation for the actual interview. Current events and cultural awarenessYour interview may not be experts in your field of study or your research methods. Your interview may spend a very small amount of time, if any, on your proposal itself. Its likely that the interview will focus more on the cultural exchange components and on our interest in both your proposed host country and that countrys work region.Here are a few ways to get informed about current events. Since youve got a deep interest in your proposed country, youre likely already doing at least one of these. But just in case you need an idea or two, you should seriously consider keeping up with a blog, magazine, or other primarily cultural resource of your proposed host country or region. It need not be academic and could focus on something youre particularly interested in, whether that be dance, travel, food, or sports.at least one newspaper that focuses on your host country or region (English-language would be acceptable; if your interview or project is in a non-English language, we highly recommend also reading the target-language version of the same.) Because most newspapers outside of the US have some sort of political party affiliation, you should be aware of your resources positioning in your host countrys political spectrum.a television program or radio show from the region.General interview preparation advice, regardless of whos interviewing you:Find information about your interviewers beforehand, if possible. Are they affiliated with the program to which youre applying? In what capacity? Are they former grantees themselves? You may or may not be given the name/s of your interviewers beforehand; if you are, a quick search of their name plus Fulbright could let you know what their role is. If youre not given their name/s beforehand: dont worry about it! Its possible that there is a pool of interviewers for your country/program and that the one/s who interview you happen to be the ones who were available in the time slot during which you were available.If this is a context in which you applied for a specific type of graduate program, think about how what you take away from the graduate program will advance not only your career and your host countrys committee. Second of all, while the interview is an important component of the selection process, its only one component. If you stumble on a sentence or two, thats okay. If one of your interviewers speaks very quickly, or if your interview is in your host countrys language, dont be shy about asking your interviewer to repeat the question. Its more important to be deliberate and to answer the question thats been asked than to wing it and be off-track.Thank your interviewers. Its highly likely that theyve volunteered their time in order to conduct the interview with you; many interviewers are Fulbright alumni.Youve got this.Share about your experience!Learn from others and help others learn from your experience by sharing about your interview experience in the Fulbright Grant Applicant Facebook Group or Fulbright SubReddit.
