Since the parts are only designed for one kind of car, they have to charge more for each unit to make a profit. The parts used to repair it will have little bearing on its overall value. This is why it may be a good idea to perform small repair work on your own. OEM parts Aftermarket parts Made by car's manufacturer Made by a third-party company More expensive Lower-priced Fit your car perfectly Tend to fit many cars OEM parts are made by the car manufacturer's factory, not by a third party. The people who are usually most concerned about getting OEM parts are car enthusiasts, body shop mechanics, and owners of brand-new vehicles. Look up everything you need to know about your vehicle, all in one place. It seems simple to let your repair shop handle the fix, but the type of parts the shop will use to repair your car can vary. There are two options: original equipment manufacturer (OEM) parts and aftermarket parts. You might think that OEM parts are better because they come straight from your car's manufacturer, but are they always the best parts for you? An original equipment manufacturer is a company that makes cars and has made replacement parts for its cars. Aftermarket parts can be made by the same factory that sold them to your car maker, but they're cheaper than parts from the original manufacturer. The only difference is who makes the parts, because both types are regulated and inspected. Your insurance company might be very specific about which type you can use on a car that has a covered claim on it.
