Mac rumors buyers guide ipad

Sorry, I should have added that I have absolutely no issues with the case closed either. Reactions: SimonMScott and subsmile Hi, I was just wondering if there are any known upcoming cases that are compatible with the iPad Pro Magic Keyboard. All that hype for nothing. It keeps falling off. With the I-Blason case on you'd have to like hold it upside down and shake it or do something extreme to make it fall out. Since I'm always going to have issues with it not closing due to the glass protector I have applied, I will most likely keep the older model as it keeps it connected to the keyboard much reliably. Reactions: eyeseyeeu and roncron SwitchEasy does not make a case that is compatible with the 2020 12.9 inch iPad Pro - If you use the 2018 version it will not close all the way. If you're desperate for this case like I was, the older model is best suited until a better manufacturer puts in the research in making a case like this with no compromises. Reactions: roncron and arn I am using the CoverBuddy from SwitchEasy and it fits well and works fine on my 12.9" iPad Pro (2018 edition) with Magic Keyboard. It's unclear whether you took it off and still found the iPad detached easily. Peace & Love CheYourNan [automerge]1591460312[/automerge] I just received mine this morning. The only issue I have is that with this case (with or without the Magic Keyboard) the volume controls area bit hard to use because they're sort of hidden behind the Apple Pencil holder and the Pencil removal could be easier (see photos). Just thought I'd post an update. Just to confirm which one do you use with your 2018 iPad Pro 12.9? Yes, 2 different versions would explain it. Below is a link to the case and I attached a picture of it on the iPad Pro Magic Keyboard. So to conclude. Hiya lads, just a heads up, preorders for the SwitchEasy Coverbuddy 12.9 iPad Pro 2020 which is tailor made for the Magic Keyboard have started. [automerge]1588896880[/automerge] Just thought I'd post an update. Seems like they're having manufacturing issues because some people tried the older model with the Magic Keyboard and it wouldn't close properly, whereas I didn't until I applied a screen protector. By the USB C connector you mean the one on the iPad, right? Yeah, I've seen a video of an asian brother using the same setup as you with no flaws. It is said to put stress on the hinge because it is too thick, when it is closed. Are there any alternatives to the cover buddy? with the case on? Has anyone have any updates if and what covers are coming out for the 11 inch Magic Keyboard for the iPad? I'm a lucky one to buy it when I did. Reactions: eyeseyeeu Hi, I was just wondering if there are any known upcoming cases that are compatible with the iPad Pro Magic Keyboard. I put it on the scale and total weight is now 2.6 pounds. So this is interesting - seems the seller (on Amazon) says it's not compatible with the Magic Keyboard for the 12.9" ? Last edited: Apr 26, 2020 Switch Easy Coverbuddy is the only one that I am aware of, but have no first-hand experience with it. The newer model DOES NOT stay attached. It charges fine. Neither the new Magic Keyboard CoverBuddy or the older Smart Keyboard & Folio one would close. Is it just me or does this not seem like a pretty big void in the market? All the best, Chef I just received mine this morning. Don't get me wrong the gap is smaller and it closes more snugly with the newer cover buddy, but I'd prefer if there was no compromise with magnets as it stops the iPad from behaving the same way it does with no case on. The first was intended only to be used with the Smart Keyboard/Folio, whereas the second is intended to be used with the Magic Keyboard. [automerge]1588896880[/automerge] Have you been testing magnet strength... For the USB Charger on the right side, you need to push down on the iPad to align the USB C port with the connector since the plastic blocks it. Fingers crossed it actually provides enough protection for when the time comes. I mean, you can use your iPad like a laptop but of course people want to use it like a traditional iPad AND still have it somewhat protected. If you don't use any screen protector the older model might just work fine but this forum says otherwise. Perhaps there's a different version floating around on the market? With the iPad Pro just on the Magic Keyboard it's still very secure, BUT if you hit it at the wrong angle (like at the bottom of the iPad where it's jutting out) it will come off and could fall. I dropped my iPad Pro (fortunately I had AppleCare) and it fell off the smart keyboard and the front shattered. I've been researching like crazy regarding this so in case anybody is stuck here this is my conclusion: 2018 CoverBuddy works with both 11 inch & 12.9 inch + Magic Keyboard 2020 CoverBuddy works with 11 inch 2018/2020 but only 12.9 inch 2018 model + Magic Keyboard So it seems the people who are having issues are fellow 2020 12.9 iPad Pro users like myself. I've used the i-Blason case that was compatible with the Smart Keyboard and I was able to put it onto the Magic Keyboard. At the end of the day my iPad's protection is the most important factor and those gaps aren't problematic if you care about protection. Just to confirm which one do you use with your 2018 iPad Pro 12.9? Yeah, I've seen a video of an asian brother using the same setup as you with no flaws. How is it when you close the device with the i-Blason halo case? Thanks Aron I was told that the SwitchEasy Coverbuddy 11 inch is unable to be charge the IPAD pro from the USB C CONNECTOR ON THE SIDE IS NOT USABLE, but it's a good work-around case for me until something is released. When the Magic Keyboard was released I ordered one and tried it with the CoverBuddy AND I HAVE NO PROBLEMS WHATSOEVER. I'm at a loss to explain why people have problems with the CoverBuddy on the Magic Keyboard. I learned that the hard way one time where the iPad bounced off my car seat, fell on to the asphalt, and cracked the screen. I've found that with the iPad Pro Magic Keyboard if you handle it the wrong way it can pop off the magnets on the back and easily fall. Is it just me or does this not seem like a pretty big void in the market? The magnets are fine too. If I had one iota of manufacturing knowledge, I'd be all over this. If you do not utilise a glass screen protector, I would suggest you get the original model (intended to be used for the Smart Keyboard/Folio), even if you have the Magic Keyboard. Would it happen on day 1 probably not. I bought mine for my 12.9" iPad Pro (2018 edition) to use with the Smart Keyboard (the iBlaise I tried before was useless). Whereas the Smart Keyboard/Folio has additional magnets. This looks like a nice setup. Thanks Aron Hi Aron, I have not noticed any issues with that on my CoverBuddy (for iPad Pro 12.9" 2018 model). This is really weird because that model wasn't supposed to be compatible with the magic keyboard, although I had absolutely zero issues However, once I applied a glass screen protector it was game over. All the best, Chef I was told that the SwitchEasy Coverbuddy 11 inch is unable to be charge the IPAD pro from the USB C through the cover only the IPAD itself. On day 100 if you aren't careful then yes it could fall. Yeah, look at my response above bro, I addressed that problem. I was thinking about the same thing. That's how you know the iPads magnets are doing all the work with the newer model. Here's the main difference: Magic Keyboard CoverBuddy has NO MAGNETS. Reactions: deycypher44 Hiya all, I have received two versions of the SwitchEasy CoverBuddy for the iPad Pro 12.9 inch 2020 model. It doesn't feel weird keeping my iPad on top of the keyboard forcing it to be closed whilst on a shattered screen. I'm not sure what you guys have noticed, but I've noticed that even with the magnets a wrong accidental move can pull the iPad off of the Magic Keyboard and potentially break it. IT IS NOT A PERFECT FIT AND THE USB C CONNECTOR ON THE SIDE IS NOT USABLE, but it's a good work-around case for me until something is released. When the Magic Keyboard was released I ordered one and tried it with the CoverBuddy AND I HAVE NO PROBLEMS WHATSOEVER. I'm at a loss to explain why people have problems with the CoverBuddy on the Magic Keyboard.
