Secret is power. But too much secrecy can be both counterproductive and too little. If people do not know there is a secret, they cannot desire it or fear it. From here the agreement reached by the senior associations of Yale University, such as Skull and Bones or Wolfs Head: sub-Masonic groups whose rules and rituals are kept secret, but whose gothic finds without neoclassical windows and clubhouses or tombs are hidden in plain sight on the streets of New Haven. These ostentatious structures leave the Passenger without a doubt that something secret is happening inside them. All but one: the tomb of the Manuscript, a society dedicated to the arts, which shows the street a simple wall of white bricks that does nothing to mystify or seduce. If you were to pass by, you might think it was the back of a workshop. The only ornament visible on its surface is the mention of a circle. A trick of light? A dirty street seal? Josef Albers and King-lui Wu, preliminary drawing of the mural for the Yale Manuscript Society House, approx. 1961, pencil on paper, 50 x 89 cm. Courtesy: King-lui Wu cards (MS 1842), manuscripts and archives, Yale University Library, New Haven Architecture Manuscript at Yale. The building, which has a number of hidden underground floors, reflects its aversion to ornaments. However, once completed in the 1962, Wu considered the structure too austere also for his angular sensibilities. He then turned to his mentor and head of Yale Design Department, Josef Albers, to help him decorate it. Albers then worked on the monumental series of paintings for which he is best known, "Homage to the Plaza" (1949-76), experiencing the optical and psychological effects that colours can produce on thousands of canvases. He had squared for these experiments, precisely because © It was a form without symbolism. Here, the colors could be pushed and juxtaposed. And pervaded by movement. Inside the square, Albers decreed, he could do the colors of him A e to do what I want, and not what they want; 126; o A. Mural Facade of the Yale Manuscript Society House, 2011. Balyrrere ~ a e A A "A secret company" sent invitations to potential members revealing the existence of an exclusive association and promising to share the "larger secrets of life."  If you have sent money to join "The Society", "Wmar-2 News Mallory Sofastaii wants to hear from you. Mandale An email to mallory@wmar.com  The letter states that the association consists of some of the most famous and powerful people in the world, including renowned actors and musicians, millionaires, casanovas and statistish. And they want to share the most "hypotent secrets of the world for free with its members. Letter A is signed by "Tom" and comes from a post office box to West Valley City, Utah. The organization is call "The Society" and "The League", but there is no more information about sender or business address. WMAR-2 News Mallory Sofastaii received this letter during the summer. He decided to accept the offer and a few weeks later he received a 55-page booklet in the mail. Once again, the group promises to give the members the secret to become "100 times richer in four weeks without even trying", "lose four pounds in four weeks by begging for your autograph." However, page 17, you learn that the secret is not free. You will need the complete manuscript 1216-page available at the discounted price of $139.95. After the deadline, the price goes back to $240.Richard Vatz, professor of communication and rhetoric for Towson University, said people can pay because © They're curious about the mystery. "Says Dr. Vatz, The letter was written about earlier when it was widely distributed several years ago. Now, he seems to be back. The Better Business Bureau and others linked the brochures to Mark Hamilton, founder of the Neothink Society, according to his pseudo-Wikipedia page. Related companies include Integrated Management Associates, Inc. and Neo-Tech Publishing Company. In a YouTube video viewed by millions, Hamilton claims to have a three,000-year-old secret. However, the big secret is more smoke and mirrors. "He says if the government acts less, we'll do better," said Vatz. "There's nothing in this philosophy that guarantees you wealth, but it's the kind of philosophy where if you just want wealth and you don't care about your next human being, you might want to adopt." WMAR-2 News contacted Hamilton and many other affiliates at the company to ask why © they did not enter their names or additional information in their letters, but no one replied. "So when people publish this and are questioned by people like journalists, they become less mysterious. They become less convincing and people "Waking up to instant wealth is something many doubt, but it's always someone who's willing to believe".And if you say you should be ashamed of yourself, they'll tell you you don't understand, right? If you had the secret and used it, you would understand", said Vatz.If the letter is dishonest, it doesn't look illegal. There are a number of people online who have said the books have "opened them to a whole new world", however WMAR-2 News has not been able to verify those reviews or the hundreds of comments on Hamilton's YouTube video.If you have something to say to Mallory, she wants to hear from you.
